

MY PERFECT SUNDAY

By Joel Dommett

I'd wake up fairly early. You resist an early rise for so long then you suddenly hit 30 and start to embrace it.

My dad used to say "wake up early and make the most out of your day" and I wanted to punch him. Now I've started saying it and I want to punch myself.

Then I'd head to the gym with friends in Peckham. They're all strong and help me lift all the big stuff.

If there was ever a fight they would face up to the aggressor while I stood at the back waving my fist adding 'yeah!'.

I tend to treat myself to a roast dinner. The best bit is the final forkful. There's tiny bits of everything that was on the plate in one delicious mouthful, all covered in gravy.

It's like a good film, book or the juice at the bottom of a Calippo lolly - the best bit is at the end. This also applies to my stand up show.

In the evening I'd go to a gig. It's my job but I love it.

YOUR PERFECT SUNDAY

My perfect Sunday is the one with a bank holiday the next day! Failing that, I like getting out into the countryside cycling and a big glass of red wine with the papers in the evening. Pete Anderton, Manchester

YOO-HOO, peekaboo, it's only me... you-know-Cloo!

Superstar George Clooney delights in photobombing Hollywood pal Matt Damon during a night out in Italy.

The pals and their wives were at Da Ivo restaurant to mark the Venice Film Festival premiere of crime drama Suburbicon, which stars Damon, 46, and is directed by Clooney, 56. Joker George and wife Amal, 39, arrived in style - by boat, of course. Clooney spent his 2014 bachelor night at Da Ivo and owner Giovanni Fracassi was thrilled to see him. He said: "George is the happiest ever."

Prue's bake for more

EXCLUSIVE BY VAZ SAYED
GREAT British Bake Off judge Prue Leith is earning yet more dough - with a new version of her memoirs.

The celebrity restaurateur made her debut on the TV show last week and was an instant hit with viewers.

Now Prue, 77 - said to be on £200,000 for Bake Off - is releasing an updated version of her life story Relish.

Since the 2014 edition she has married John Playfair and been chosen as Mary Berry's high-profile replacement on Bake Off. And like the best of cakes, the former Great British Menu judge will be hoping for a nice rise in sales.

Quercus publisher Jane Wood said: "Unlike most people in their mid-70s, Prue Leith shows no signs of slowing down. In the past three years she has fallen in love, remarried and launched a major new television career as a Great British Bake Off judge."

Prue joined existing judge Paul Hollywood, 51, and new hosts Sandi Toksvig, 59, and Noel Fielding, 41, for Channel 4's version of the show. And despite initial reservations about how the former BBC hit would fare, reviews have been glowing.

Sandi revealed how Prue was writing her book in between Bake Off takes.

The comedian said: "In our breaks, Noel and I and the two judges are allowed to sit in the library lined with leather-bound books. We quickly fall into routine. Paul has half an eye on some sport on the TV. Prue is writing another book and Noel chats to me while I knit or take charge of the open fire.

"I cannot think of a time in my life when four people have been more companionable or at ease with each other."

As well as her memoirs, Prue is also working on the final book of her novel trilogy, the Angelotti Chronicles.

The Lost Son - due out next autumn - follows three generations of an Anglo-Italian family in the restaurant trade.
